"Trapped car" is what we classify as an emergency. Like firefighters to the flame, we come to the rescue. The cold winter air puts stress on older garage doors and can cause the springs to snap. Avoid a potential hazard and missing carpool by having your garage door system tuned-up annually.

Our winterization tune-up is a must to prevent maintenance issues from forming during the bitter cold months. Overhead Door Company of Pueblo has a team of professionally trained technicians to help keep your garage door and opener in tip-top shape with a winterization tune up.

WINTERIZATION

While it's best to winterize your garage and home before the cold settles in, it's not too late to take precautions to make your home energy-efficient, to ensure you're warm the rest of the winter, and save some cash on utility bills year-round. In addition to weatherstripping your garage door (we can help with that), entry doors and windows, you should always:

- Insulate your water heater if it's in the garage to prevent damage from stress by keeping water hot in the cold temps.
- Cover exposed pipes because a gushing flood in the winter is no fun.
- Cover and seal switches and outlets. It is estimated that two to five percent of air enters homes through outlets on exterior walls, according to ConservationMart.com.
- Consider upgrading the insulation in your garage walls, to increase thermal efficiency.
- Cut off water to outside faucets and winterize sprinkler system and other outdoor water features.
- Winterize garage door and opener with a Tune Up.
